Do you get along with the generation of your parents and grandparents?

David

"No, I don't. They are too old to understand me and my world. All I hear is what I should and shouldn't do. Everything is dangerous to them: the Internet, social networks, going out with friends, etc. Their life is so boring! But what I hate most is when they start talking. Gosh! Boring, boring, boring! I hope I'll never be like them when I'm their age..."

Kate

"Mmm, yes and no. I love my parents and grandparents but I don't like spending much time with them. You see, they have different interests and hobbies and ideas about spending one's free time. I respect them, so I'm polite and respectful but I find the communication very difficult. I think that's normal. It's called generation gap, isn't it?"

Leo

"I love when grown-ups take me seriously and when they talk to me as if I'm grown-up, too. I'm thinking about my uncle, who is a lot of fun and a real friend. We go fishing together and talk and laugh. He's always there for me. This is how it should work – not only to expect young people to be polite and understand the older ones. They should try to understand us as well!"

Sandra

"I absolutely love my grandma. She knows very little about the modern world advantages – for example she can't understand how I can use my e-mail on my PC as well as on my phone. She has a mobile phone just in case of emergency and she is the kindest and the most loving person on the planet. I also like some of her elderly friends. Sometimes I can't stop laughing when I listen to their stories. You see, they aren't always boring and grumpy!"

Tim

"I don't know. Some of them are fine and some aren't. It's not possible to get along with everybody. I don't get along with some young people either. I don't think it has to do with age. And I don't see why it is so important to be friends with everybody!"
